This leaflet is only a guide. For official purposes, please refer to the Income Tax Act.

Copies of this leaflet are available free of charge from district taxation offices.

If you no longer live in Canada but receive all or part of your income from Canadian sources, you should determine whether your country of residence has a treaty with Canada. There may be provisions in the treaties that would exempt you from paying tax on that income in Canada.

What is a tax treaty?

A tax treaty, also called an agreement or convention, is a carefully negotiated bilateral treaty reconciling certain provisions of Canadian tax law with those of the other country involved in the negotiations.

Tax treaties provide special rules for determining

- the country in which taxpayers are resident,
- the types of income that may be taxed in each country,
- the special treatment to be given to specific types of income,
- the rates of withholding tax on specific sources of income paid to non-residents.

As a member of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), Canada has patterned most of its tax treaties on the OECD model tax convention.

Each tax treaty entered into is subsequently implemented by a Canadian statute which provides that the treaty in question is to have the force of law. If there is any conflict between the wording of a tax treaty and provisions in the Canadian Income Tax Act, the tax treaty will overrule the Act, at least to the extent of the inconsistency.

Canada enters into tax treaties to prevent double taxation of its residents and at the same time ensure that they do not completely avoid the payment of tax in both countries.

Double taxation

The problem of double taxation arises because each country has its own tax system and basis for imposing tax. Thus people who live in one country and derive income from another country, could be liable to pay tax in both countries on the same income. Tax treaties attempt to prevent this from occurring. The two countries generally decide which country will collect the tax that is due – the place of residence or the country where the income is earned.

Taxpayers who consider that they have not been treated in accordance with the tax treaty (i.e. they feel they have been subject to double taxation), may institute "competent authority" procedures. The request for competent authority consideration is generally made to the tax department in the country where the taxpayer is a resident for tax purposes. It is simply a request for the governments of both countries to review the facts to ensure that the taxpayer is treated in accordance with the terms of the tax treaty. Information Circular 71-17R2, available from district offices, outlines the procedures for requesting "competent authority" consideration.

Tax avoidance

Tax treaties also ensure that residents of Canada do not avoid paying any tax in either country.

To prevent tax avoidance, tax treaties provide for an exchange of information so that tax authorities of the two countries can determine whether taxes are being avoided.

Refund of tax withheld

Paragraphs 65 to 75 of Information Circular 77-16R2 outline the procedures to be followed in Canada by both residents and non-residents requesting a refund of non-resident tax withheld.

Countries having tax treaties with Canada

The countries on the following list have tax treaties in force with Canada. In addition, agreements have been signed with Brazil, Cameroon, Cyprus, Ivory Coast, Kenya, Liberia, Sri Lanka, Thailand and Zambia but are not yet in force.
